Project Description:

"There's been a setback in efforts to settle Māori land claims, with the collapse of the 40 million dollar treaty settlement that had been reached between the Crown and the Eastern Bay of Plenty's Whakatohea people. The settlement was reached in October 1996 between the Crown and tribal negotiators. That settlement had to be ratified by tribal beneficiaries - but after 18 months, that still hasn't happened. LIVE IV with Treaty Negotiations Minister Doug Graham

1715 BUSINESS HEADLINE

Aucklanders, angry over the city's power crisis, have staged a protest march in the city centre, demanding the resignation of the chief executive of Mercury Energy Wayne Gilbert. About 200 students, retailers, residents and workers marched up Queen Street in heavy rain waving placards and black balloons. PACKAGE FROM Sharon Brett Kelly

The insurance industry is also been the target of mounting frustration over when businesses can expect to see some financial compensation. Last night on Checkpoint, Reg Newcombe, chairman of the retailer group, Power for the People had this to say. AUDIO CUT

LIVE IV WITH Catherine Beard from the Insurance Council.

There's been a setback in efforts to settle Māori land claims, with the collapse of the 40 million dollar treaty settlement that had been reached between the Crown and the Eastern Bay of Plenty's Whakatohea people. LIVE IV WITH the Māori MP for the area Tuariki Delamere, who was involved in [illegible] the original settlement.

1730 HEADLINES

Debate continues over the government's code of social and family responsibility - but if you are intending to respond, Checkpoint has discovered that the best way to get your views noticed is to classify yourself as a group. The Social Policy Agency says that's because there might be too many written answers from individuals. PACKAGE FROM Melita Tull

A short time ago John Angus from the Social Policy Agency said the issue had been reconsidered and all responses would be read.

In Indonesia, pressure is increasing on newly reappointed President Suharto to reform the political system and the economy. Student-led protests calling for greater democracy are intensifying, the Rupiah is still falling, and the International Monetary Fund continues to demand radical reforms.

1745 SPORTS

Friday the 13th has lived up to its reputation for Aucklander Grant Triplow - who was in bed this morning when a huge girder crashed through the roof of his inner-city apartment crushing the wall between two bedrooms. The five tonne piece of steel fell from a construction site on top of a seven storey building - Grant Triplow and his two of flatmates were inside at the time. IV WITH GRANT
